Investing in South Salt Lake's Future

Message from Mayor Cherie Wood

If you've lived in Utah for any length of time, you know that when the snow melts and the temperatures warm, it's the start of road construction season. South Salt Lake is no exception—and that's a good thing. Streets, sidewalks, utilities, and bridges are the backbone of any city. They require thoughtful and constant maintenance, planning, and financial investment.

This year, our Engineering Department has been hard at work updating key residential streets (Maxwell, Cordelia, Carole Cir, Truman, and Robert), reconstructing a commercial road (700 W), and replacing two street bridges over Mill Creek at 200 and 300 East.

Meanwhile, our Public Works Department is making progress on a new public works campus and leading several waterline, sewer, and stormwater improvement projects across the city.

We're also partnering with UDOT and UTA on projects that affect South Salt Lake, including the double-tracking of FrontRunner and adding new street lighting along State Street. Add at least five separate private development projects, and it's likely you've encountered some orange cones and detours recently!

I know that construction can be frustrating—especially when it affects your commute or daily routine. But much like replacing a roof, investing in infrastructure isn't glamorous—but when the storm hits, you'll be glad we did it.

Like many cities across the country, South Salt Lake faces the challenges of aging infrastructure and limited funding. That's why we must be strategic with every dollar. And because we hold ourselves to a high standard when it comes to transparency, I want you to know exactly where your tax dollars are going. This year, we are investing approximately $14 million in street and sidewalk improvements, and another $9 million in water and stormwater infrastructure projects. These investments are essential to a safe, reliable, and vibrant city. And thanks to smart planning, we were able to leverage tax dollars to receive substantial grant resources to help pay for these projects.

We're also working to improve how we communicate with you about project updates and impacts. Visit our city website, where you'll find an interactive construction project map showing current projects, their scope, and future plans. We're also enhancing these tools and making it easier for you to find the information you are looking for. I would love to hear your suggestions for improving our communication or any other feedback that would be helpful.

Community value surveys demonstrate that infrastructure improvements are a top priority for residents. But I know it still takes patience. So, thank you for recognizing that these temporary disruptions lead to lasting improvements. Together, we're building a stronger South Salt Lake.

Curbside Cleanup Program

The South Salt Lake Curbside Cleanup Program is available to all city residents who receive city garbage service (this does not include apartments and multiplex units that contract their own garbage service). Curbside pick up will take place November 3-12 for approved items that are boxed, bundled or bagged. Items may be placed in the park strip up to one week before your scheduled pick up day, and must not obstruct sidewalks, gutters, storm drains, or roadways. View your exact pick up date and all program guidelines at sslc.gov.

SSL Construction Projects

Construction Season isn't over yet. While construction is a necessary, if inconvenient part of city life, you can mitigate the effects on yourself by staying informed of current projects and planning ahead. Read below about several large ongoing construction projects in South Salt Lake.

200 E. Mill Creek Bridge: Starting November 3, the 200 East Mill Creek Bridge will be closed for construction. Detours are established on 300 East and State Street. Disruptions are expected for students and families at Granite Park Junior High. When dropping your children off, please allow extra time to account for detours.

700 West: Construction is ongoing on 700 West from 3300 to 3900 South. Northbound traffic is closed. Expect intermittent disruptions to driveway access, lane shifts, and sidewalk closures.

Visit the Construction Projects Map at sslc.gov to stay apprised of all construction.
